

Telemedicine

During these difficult time, telemedicine is being used more frequently and is the future of medicine. Currently, a company active in the telemedicine sector will normally need at least two insurance policies, and sometimes more, to cover its varied exposures. Russell Bond has access to various markets that offer products to help your insureds avoid the potential gaps in coverage that can arise with such a piecemeal approach.

These providers come in all shapes and sizes. Most of what we see are small to midsize healthcare service providers. These include remote providers of physician or psychiatric consultations through an app or online portal. But providers of lifestyle management services, such as weight loss coaching and treatments for male baldness, have also purchased coverage. A third market segment comprises the technology companies that make telemedicine possible, including software/hardware manufacturers or developers and platform hosts.

Available coverages include:

- Professional Liability (medical malpractice)
- Technology based services liability
- Technology products liability
- General liability and products / completed operations liability
- Fire legal liability
- Medical payments
- Employee benefits liability
- Information security and privacy liability
- Privacy breach response
- Regulatory defense and penalties
- PCI fines, expenses and costs
- Multimedia and advertising liability

Coverage is ideal for (but not limited to):

- Medical providers (physicians, psychiatrists, psychologists, NPs / PAs / RNs; hospitals; dentists)
- Software / hardware / products manufacturers or developers (smart phones, tablets, laptops, monitors, watches, medallions)
- Telemedicine platform hosts
